

Isabel Aguilera

Very few women have the privilege of being rated by Fortune magazine amongst the top 50 most influential executives in the world. One of them is Isabel Aguilera. Furthermore, she is considered to be one of the top 25 senior managers in Europe by The Financial Times, and was one of the 100 most influential people in Spain in 2006 according to Spanish newspaper El Mundo. She is, therefore, one of the Spanish women with a greatest professional recognition worldwide. One of the most important financial newspapers in the world, The Wall Street Journal, included her amongst the 30 most influential business women in Europe for her role in leading Dell Computers to the top of the market, becoming the company with the largest volume of trade in its sector thanks to the incredible results achieved in Spain. Today her 20 years of experience in marketing and operations serve well to her role at the Board of Directors of Indra, the leading Spanish IT company, as well as to the compensation Management Committee of the international university corporation Laureate Education Inc. (NASDAQ).
